FINAL HOME GAME SATURDAY MORNING

Saturday at 10 a. m. the Gould Gridsters will ring down the curtain on the season of 1940. Livermore Falls will oppose the local eleven with perhaps the strongest team they have put on the field in any previous Gould-Livermore game. The visitors as yet are trying to get their first victory over Gould and the Academy boys are going to try to uphold the honor of never having been beaten by Livermore Falls.

Livermore Falls defeated Norway 7-0 and Norway defeated Gould 7-0; so on paper it looks like tough sledding for the Bethel eleven. However, the team has been showing great improvement in the past week and with the team at full strength again the battle should be an interesting finale to the season of 1940.

The loud-speaking system will be in operation again on Saturday morning. Fans were kept well informed by such sports announcers as Ed Vachon and Howard Chivers last week, and they will be on the job again Saturday morning.

William Henry Chadbourne

William Henry Chadbourne, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Philip H. Chadbourne, passed away in his sleep Wednesday. He was born in Lewiston June 26, 1940, and had always been in good health. The cause of death was status lymphatica, the result of a diseased thymus gland.

Besides his parents, he is survived by a brother, Theodore S.; two sisters, Phyllis and Carolyn; grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Chadbourne of Auburn and Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Saunders of Clinton, Mass.; and several aunts and uncles.

Private funeral services will be held at Waterford Friday afternoon.

HUSKING BEE AND PARTY FOR MYSTERY CLUB

Miss Marguerite Hall, assisted by Miss Rebecca Gordon and Mrs. Hugh Thurston, were hostesses at a Halloween party given Thursday evening for members of the Mystery Club of which Miss Hall is president.

The group met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Thurston early in the evening and were transported by truck to their destination, the farm of Miss Hall's grandmother, Mrs. Leona Buck, on Swan's Hill, which was reached by following a trail of Jack-o-lanterns, ghosts and other signs.

Outside the farmhouse they were met by the hostess who presented them through under ground passages directed them along a path lighted by Jack-o-lanterns to a field back of the house. After being greeted by a witch in the person of Mrs. Wade Thurston, the trail then led them through under ground passages and cellar to the dining room where an oyster stew supper was served.

MISS HERRICK IN PARIS

A letter was received last week by Mrs. Norris Brown from her sister, Miss Kathryn Herrick, when the letter was written, early last month, she was working in Paris, France, with the Associated Press. She was interested in conditions during the German occupation and wrote that the restrictions enforced were not severe where she had been.

Miss Herrick has had many memorable experiences since going to Europe last year. She was in London for some time after the war started, leaving there to accept a teaching position in British East Africa. On her way through France she was unable to continue from a Mediterranean port and was working for the National Broadcasting Company in Paris when the German army arrived. During the summer she spent two months near Nice in southern France.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt again received a vote in Tuesday's national election which indicated, in number of electoral votes, a tremendous approval of his eight years' record. Late reports credit Roosevelt with 493 electoral votes (39 states) to 63 for Wendell L. Willkie. States supporting Willkie are Colorado, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Montana, North Carolina, South Dakota and Vermont.

In Maine Willkie led by 9,154, the lowest Republican margin in 24 years. The state's total is reported. Willkie, 163,528; Roosevelt, 154,774. The total vote in the state set a new record. Willkie carried 11 of the 16 counties. Earl Browder, Communist candidate, received about 350 votes in Maine.

Bethel and Oxford County, as usual, were in the Republican column. County totals are:

A TRUE STORY

He was foreign born and old. Eighty his last birthday with great grandchildren to help celebrate the occasion. Wide-awake, little Americans who teased him sometimes about coming from a country where they boss people around and believe that machine guns are more important than automobiles.

But he loved America, more than they did. Naturally. He knew what Americanism really means. Besides, he had sacrificed for this adopted country of his and sacrifice breeds love.

As the clouds gathered and it became clear that America must prepare for any eventuality he was troubled. He wanted to play a part this time as he had 23 years before when the country had prepared for that other war. But he was younger then, at work in a factory that stopped making typewriters to turn out shell cases for 75 MM guns and he had sons. Three of them went overseas with the American army and only one came back.

Now everything was different. He had been retired 10 years before and nobody thought he could do anything this time. Besides, there was the question of his nationality.

Then came the call for skilled workmen. Men who had the training and experience that enabled them to handle machine tools with the precision necessary to turn out the fine parts of an airplane. Hope stirred in the old heart.

He started out from his daughter's house one early morning to apply for a job. But would they take him? Or would they say he was too old? People said old men weren't wanted any more. And would they question his devotion to the United States because he had been born in a village in Europe eighty years before?

He needn't have worried. He got the job. American industry today is looking for skill and hiring it. The age of a workman isn't so important if he can do the job and hundreds of men who had retired are going back to work. Industry also recognizes the fact that today devotion to the American way of life is not a matter of nationality but of the individual's own love of freedom!

FIRST-AID to the AILING HOUSE

By ROGER B. WHITMAN

Worn and Soiled Floor.
QUESTION: About 10 years ago we put down a hardwood floor and stained it dark. It has been waxed a number of times each year. It has worn in spots. Can I use anything on these spots, or must I scrape the whole floor? The floor looks soiled and I can't seem to get it clean.

Answer: As a first step in doing over your floor, you should wipe well with turpentine to remove all of the wax. It is very probable that much of the dirt is in the wax, and this treatment will go far to restoring the appearance. With the wax removed, you can touch up the light spots with oil stain. Apply a coat and wipe off immediately, and continue until with successive applications, the color matches the surrounding floor. You should then finish with two coats of good floor varnish before rewaxing. Without varnish, dirt going into the wax will work through to the wood. With varnish this cannot happen.

Warped Bedroom Door.
QUESTION: I built my house last fall, and now find that the door to one of the bedrooms is badly warped. The top corner does not come within an inch of closing when the door is shut. Can I do anything about this?

Answer: A door with any claim to quality should be built so that it is proof against warping, and warping, is something that would justify a complaint to the dealer. In the long run it will be better to replace your warped door with one that is warp-proof, because even after it has been straightened, it may not stay so. A cabinet maker could do the job for you, by putting the door in a press, after which he would run heavy dowels into it to hold it straight. But a new door of well-seasoned wood is the best answer.

Food Moths.
QUESTION: I find moths in my packages of cereals and crackers, which I keep in my kitchen closet. What should I do to get rid of them?
Answer: Those moths thrive in dried food of all kinds. Boxes of food that have been opened or broken should be thrown out. Clean off the shelves and scrub thoroughly with hot soapsuds. All cereals, nuts, crackers, spaghetti, etc., should be kept in tight containers; tin boxes or tightly capped glass jars.

Gold Leaf Frame.
QUESTION: The gold leaf on an old-fashioned mirror frame has been rubbed off in spots. I should like to know if there is some liquid preparation that I could use to cover the whole frame.

Answer: At your local art store you can get what is generally called a bronzing liquid. It comes in a variety of gold finishes and can be easily brushed on.

Stained Floor.
QUESTION: In the case of a much stained flooring, we have been advised that the stain, due to general neglect, can be removed by washing with water containing soda. Is this correct?

Answer: A strong solution of washing soda or trisodium phosphate will remove the finish, but if the stains are in the wood, only a saturated solution of oxalic acid will bleach it out, after the finish has been removed. A floor finish that is in poor condition and badly stained should be scraped with a floor sanding machine, then refinished.

Sidewall Shingles.
QUESTION: A certain company is suggesting asphalt shingles for the upper half of my house and asbestos cement shingles for the lower half. Also, something is said about asphalt sheeting under the shingles. Would an all asbestos job be preferable to the above arrangement?

Answer: My preference would be for an all asbestos shingle finish, from the standpoint of appearance and durability. Asphalt saturated felt is always used under asbestos shingle siding.

If down or feathers are used to fill the separate cushion, make an inner cushion of ticking with a top and a bottom piece the size of the box top; and a straight three-inch piece around the sides. If kapok is used for filling, this inner cushion may be made of muslin. The cover of the separate cushion has corded seams to match the box slip cover.

NOTE: These directions should be clipped from the paper as they are not available in booklet form. However, complete directions for making slip covers and for making corded seams are in SEWING, Book No. 1. No. 3 also contains valuable slip cover suggestions. These 32-page booklets are 10c each. PAD the top of a box and slip cover it; then add a separate cushion three inches thick. The result will be a smart ottoman that either may match or contrast with the cover of your favorite chair. The little feet made of drawer pulls keep the ottoman from looking like a box. A corded seam where the skirt of the slip cover joins the top, and an inverted pleat at each corner of the skirt also give a professional touch. I suggest tacking the slip cover

Nat, pulling Skippy in an express wagon, came up to the side of the car.

"Hello!" he said, his smile widening with recognition, displaying a missing tooth. "I'm not Admiral Byrd now that there isn't any snow."

"Of course not. How stupid of me. I should have known. This is my cousin, Miss Oliver, Nat, and Skippy," said Gay.

"Hello, Nat," Kate said. "Hello, Skippy."

"Hello," Nat grinned again and Skippy ducked his head.

"Is Dr. Houghton in now?" Gay asked, feeling her heart leap and plunge.

"No, he's not here now."

"You mean he isn't here at the house?"

"He went away last week. Grandfather came home. He brought me a whole fleet of boats."

"Brought me a boat!" Skippy piped up.

"Is your mother here, Nat?" Gay asked.

"Ayo, she's here. She'll be pleased to see you, I expect. Did you come all the way from New York? Course I like boats better on account of my father's an officer in the Navy but that's some swell car."

"Drive them around a couple of blocks, will you, Kate." Gay opened the door and stepped out. "I want to talk to their mother."

"H-p-h, kids," Kate slipped over under the wheel.

"Whoopee!" Nat shouted and Skippy echoed his brother's enthusiasm, then ducked his head again.

The bug tan roadster moved away from the curb. Gay walked up the steps of the house and rapped on the knocker. Mary Adams, herself, opened the door. Her brown face beamed with pleasure when she recognized Gay.

"Come in," she said. "Time is a surprise."

The wide hallway was familiar, the open door there were people and Mrs. Adams in the parlor which in March had held bitter sweet and feisty plumes of pine. Following Mary through the living room to the porch, Gay found her foot day late, the day after John had brought her in from her mother's home. They'd been so distant she and John's polite to each other unhappy, remote. Mary must have noticed. Was she, too, remembering the end of Gay's visit here?

If she remembered, she gave no sign.

"Are you alone?" she asked. "It's marvelous to be able to use the porch again. You don't appreciate this weather unless you've spent a winter in Maine."

"My cousin is with me, Kate Oliver."

"Oh, I've heard John speak of her." Mary darted up from her chair. "Where is she? Why didn't you bring her in?"

"She's taking Nat and Skippy for a ride. Mary," Gay asked, "where is John?"

Mary curled herself into a wicker chair. "I don't know exactly," she said.

"Has he left here?" Gay's voice faltered, "for good, I mean?"

"Yes. He was in Boston last week." Mary glanced at Gay, then down at her small brown hands.

"I know. He wrote me from there."

"That there is a chance of his getting in the research department connected with the General Hospital?" Mary asked eagerly. "Father thinks it's fairly certain. John made a splendid impression when he interned there."

"But since then," Gay persisted. "He isn't in Boston now?"

"We've been forwarding mail to his mother's. I re-addressed a letter from you this morning. I've learned to know your handwriting pretty well. I—"

"This morning? A letter?"

"Yes. Why?" Mary asked quickly, in surprise.

"It was a letter which shouldn't have been written," Gay said. "I've come to head it off or explain. Could he be at his mother's in Rockland?"

"I don't know. Why don't you—"

She paused, then said, "If you don't want to go there, or call, I'll call for you."

"Will you? I don't— There are reasons. I'd like to see Debby but I'm sure it would be better if you—"

"I will." She rose, smiled at Gay compassionately and went into the house.

Gay sat on the porch looking out across the sunny lawn where peonies bloomed along the fence and the foliage of a maple tree shaded the children's sand-box and swing.

She was only absent-mindedly aware of the objects her eyes rested upon. Every nerve, every sense in her body was caught up in a state of suspense.

Had John gone away deliberately, to avoid any move from her? Was he, by his silence, making a clean break as effectively as she had meant to make it when she had written the letter which Mary, this morning, had re-directed?

She started up as Mary returned to the porch.

"He isn't at home," Mary said. "His mother thinks that he may have gone to a cabin down east near Matheon."

"John is at the cabin?" Gay's voice was light and breathless.

"They aren't sure. They've had no word. They're holding his mail."

"Of course he has. I didn't think—" Gay glanced at her watch. "We can make it before night. Thank you, Mary. I must find Kate."

"You're going there?" Mary asked doubtfully. "It's a fairly long drive. I had expected that you would stay for lunch, at least."

"No. We're going. Wish me luck, Mary. I'll need it."

Mary Adams smiled and pressed Gay's hand.

"I think you'll carry your luck with you," she said.

CHAPTER XVII

John placed a log on the fire, went to the doorway, stood looking out across the lake. Dusk was falling. The last reflection of the sunset had faded from the still surface of the water. Across the lake a loon stretched mournfully through the silence. John closed the door and returned to the fire.

He should prepare something for supper, he thought, standing irresolutely on the hearth with his back to the fire. Funny how he had come to dread getting supper. When that had been accomplished, the day was definitely over and night had begun. He was able to get through the day fairly well. While the sun shone, he made fishing from the canoe or lying on the boat an excuse for being out of doors. But the nights were unbearably lonely.

He shouldn't have returned to the cabin. He should have taken the walking trip through Canada which he had half planned when Dr. Sargeant had insisted that he take a two weeks vacation until the Boston matter was settled one way or another. He would be able to make the decision he must make more calmly and with less pain anywhere in the world except here. The cabin was filled with ghosts of Gay. He saw her everywhere, on the couch with the lamp light falling across her hair; seated on the footstool beside the hearth in a characteristic position, her arms hugging her knees; coming out through the door of the bedroom she and Kate had occupied, her face fresh and smiling after a long night of sleep, in a jersey and slacks, a ribbon around her hair. . . .

He hadn't expected to feel as he did. He had thought that he would be able to make the decision here. He had not questioned his ability to think clearly and logically, to discipline his emotions. Strange that he had not considered the poignant insistence of memories, the ghosts of Gay that lived on in the cabin.

But he must make a decision. If he secured this post in Boston, he would have to decide whether he was willing to have her there with him, using her own money to provide a place for them to live or whether it was wiser, for her ultimate good and his own, to make a definite break and follow, alone, the course he had charted for himself before he had declared his love to Gay. It was all or nothing. There could be no compromise. The next time they met—

But would they meet again? He had sensed in her letters a change in her feeling for him since she had returned from her visit to Maine. He couldn't blame her. It had been pretty awful for her, as estranging as his visit to New York. She loved him. He did not question that. He loved her. But was love enough? Was it as fresh and as steadfast now as it had been here at the cabin last fall? Could any love survive the misunderstandings, the quarrels, the bickering to which their love had been exposed? Wouldn't it be better—?

He wouldn't think of it, now. He would build a fire in the kitchen range and prepare supper, making a long job of it to keep night from coming too soon.

He went out into the dusk, filled a bag with chips and birch logs. None of his senses was secure from ghosts of Gay. The smell of pine needles and freshly chopped wood recalled the night she had slipped out of the cabin to meet him, the night Todd Janeway had arrived. His eyes lifted above the pile of chips. They had sat there, leaning above the logs. She'd worn a soft white dress fastened up under her chin and her hair had curled loosely against her shoulders. He'd loved her so, then. He loved her now. If they might have stayed here—

He lit the lamps in the kitchen, laid the fire carefully, taking a great deal of time. Yellow flames curled around birch-logs in the stove. He collected ingredients for flap jacks; butter, milk, flour, eggs—There were the fish he had caught this morning, cleaned and salted, ready for the pan. Cornmeal, salt pork and strips.

He placed the fish in the pan. Through the sputtering sound they made, he heard a car coming in the lane. One of the acquaintances he'd made at the store in the village, perhaps young Dr. Reynolds, stopping in on his rounds. Any visitor would be welcome. Whoever it was would see the light and come in. He couldn't leave the fish.

He heard the motor of the car race, then die off into silence as an ignition key was turned. That motor! No one of his acquaintances here drove a car with such power. His hand, holding a fork over the fish, was shaking. He turned, his heart thumping, a singing sound in his ears.

The kitchen door stood open. He saw her coming toward him through the dusk, running across the clearing, up the steps.

"Gay—!" he cried, and plunged forward to open the door.

She came into the kitchen, hesitantly, as though the sound of his voice had checked the impulse which had brought her swiftly to him through the dusk.

"Hello, John," she said.

They stood staring at each other like strangers.

"Where did you come from?" he asked at last. "How did you know I was here?"

"I wrote you a letter," she said quietly, "telling you that I was going to marry Todd."

"I have not received it."

"No, it's in Rockland."

"Have you been there?"

She shook her head. "Mary called your mother for me. She, your mother, thought you might be here."

The singing in her ears dimmed her voice to a thread of sound.

"But if you wrote me that," he asked, "why are you here?"

"Because I didn't mean it. I discovered, after I'd mailed it, that I couldn't. I tried to get to you before the letter did. I drove last night to Portland, then on here today." Her eyes widened, then closed. She swayed, reached out for the table. "John—!"

He caught her, held her. She clung to him. They kissed. Presently she drew away. "Are you glad to see me?" she asked.

"Glad! Oh, Gay!"

"Will you still be glad when I tell you that I'm going to stay?"

"Are you?"

"Always—as long as you want me."

He looked down into her lifted face, weary but radiant, her eyes shining softly through the tears that misted her lashes. "Will you take a chance, Gay?" he asked gravely. "Can we make a go of it? Will you be happy? In spite of everything that has happened or will happen, do you still want to marry me?"

"Darling!" She smiled. "Would I have driven all these miles—?"

His lips against hers stilled her voice. They had in that moment of reconciliation, of faith and trust renewed, no need for words. His arms, holding her, were strong and secure and safe. Her vital young body pressing close to him, was a promise and an assurance. Moments ticked away unconsidered in the secure realization of weeks, months, years stretching in a bright open vista ahead.

"I beg your pardon," a voice said from the door.

They drew apart, smiling. Kate came into the kitchen.

"It may mean less than nothing to you," she said, "but something is burning."

"Good Lord!" John groaned. "It's the fish!"

He glanced around with a dazed expression. Kate caught up a dishcloth and grasped the handle of the pan. She turned to regard Gay and John with an expression of studied derision which failed entirely to conceal the emotion in her eyes.

"Get out of here," she said. "I'm hungry. I want something that's fit to eat."

Still fuming, she slapped the pan in the sink. Gay and John looked at each other and broke into laughter, then, hands joined, went out into the dusk.

[THE END.]

'THANK YOU, MY FRIEND'

By MARTHA K. DAVIS

McClure Syndicate, WNU Service.

"I'M TERRIBLY sorry, Tom, but we are having the rector and his wife for dinner."

I doubtless looked my disappointment.

Stranded for a few hours in a western city, I had happily bumped into an old college chum, Jerry Bosworth, whom I hadn't seen in years.

Of course nothing would do but I must go to his home for dinner. "Judy will be mighty glad to see you," he said heartily, and remembering pretty Judith Bosworth, I experienced a pleasurable anticipation at the thought of meeting her again.

I found Judith charming as ever and the thought of a few hours' visit with these old friends was decidedly gratifying.

Now—here was my hostess announcing the impending arrival of a boreome rector and his probably equally boreome wife.

"It's a perfect shame it happens this way," deplored Judith, "but you will enjoy meeting Nancy Rathburn, Tom. Everyone adores her. How she ever happened to marry George Rathburn—I! The things she accomplishes! Why—last winter—" but Judith's dissertation was interrupted by the arrival of her guests.

The Reverend George Rathburn was all that my hostess had implied. Pompous—conceited—arrogant! But for all his bluster, he quickly faded into insignificance.

Beautiful, quiet, poised Nancy Rathburn! The way she moved—her voice—no, the secret lay in that expression in her eyes. What were those fathomless, dreamy eyes seeing? Surely not her pragmatical little husband, or anyone or anything in Judith's cozy apartment.

I was glad to be placed beside her at the table, but the smallness of the party forbade any intimate conversation.

It was during the salad course that I noticed the ring on the third finger of her right hand. A flower cluster of diamonds embedded in black onyx, surrounded by a wreath of dull gold.

I was a fool for speaking.

"Your ring, Mrs. Rathburn—may I look at it? It reminds me of a ring a comrade of mine in the war—"

Nancy Rathburn's white hand clenched.

"Ah—show him your ring, my dear," broke in the rector. "Perhaps he can tell you something about it. You see, Mr. Neeland, my wife picked up that ring at some pawnshop over in London. It has some insignia woven in the wreath."

I took in mine the hand she slowly extended. The fingers were like ice.

And as I looked down, I saw again a trench—a khaki-clad man, whimsical, gay, untouched by fear—heedless—cynical. "What does it matter, old man? Nothing can happen to me. It's all happened. You know—none of those arranged affairs. She doesn't give a damn whether or not I'm hit by a bloomin' shell. But there is a girl, Tommy lad! Oh, well—she's tied as tight as I."

There was a small piece chipped from the onyx.

I remembered about that. "By Jove—if I hadn't put up my hand, Tommy! Trust the 'House of Garland' to jolly well protect its sons of war!"

And then—convalescing in a hospital. Young Lord Garland—Dicky Garland calling frantically for—"Nannie! Nannie!"

Later—a firm hand-clasp. This ring cutting into my flesh. "Good-by, Tommy, old man! Jolly luck! Take good care of yourself."

I looked up. Nancy Rathburn's eyes were enormous and her under lip was caught tight between her teeth. She was holding her breath.

I said, "No, the ring this reminded me of was—quite different. In fact, on close inspection, this is not like it at all."

I had to leave directly after dinner. Nancy Rathburn stood beside her husband. As I shook hands with her conventionally, I caught a faint little whisper—"Thank you, my friend."

to settle the political question of the day by a game of football on the Common Tuesday afternoon, but neither party scored, so the election of President had to be determined in the usual way.

GOULD 25, NEWPORT, VT. 6

After battling through two periods all even at 6 points apiece, Gould Academy's offense started to click and the score started to mount. It was a beautiful 35 yard off-tackle cut-back by Ireland early in the third period that sent the "Blue and Gold" out ahead and started them off to victory. It is an interesting note that each of Gould's four starting backfield men scored a touchdown. The lone extra point was made by Irving Cummings on a pass.

Clough, Ireland and P. Cummings all turned in beautiful runs during the game while Brown was doing a good job of clearing the path. The blocking was especially good during the last half. Whipple Abbe proved to be outstanding in the line last week, doing a whale of a job. He was ably assisted by King and Irving Cummings who also played an excellent game. Every man on the team deserves credit for much improved play and determination.

The Newport club completing 6 out of 12 passes on rain soaked gridiron deserve much credit. They fought hard and made it a real battle until the final whistle.

Gould made 14 first downs to 9
for Newport. The winners passed 3 times completing 2 while the losers made 6 good out of 12 attempts. The kicks were all even with each team averaging 30 yards which proved very good averages with a rain and mud soaked ball.
The Vermont club was penalized
65 yards to 20 yards against Gould.

THE OXFORD COUNTY UNITED PARISH NEWS NOTES

The Parish is marking 15 years of united efforts this Sunday by a union service in North Waterford at 11 a. m. There will be a basket dinner in the North Waterford vestry after the morning service.
A special service will mark the event. In its decade and a half the Oxford County United Parish has gained a national reputation among the churches as an effective Larger Parish. Certainly those to whom the Parish has ministered will want to attend this service. All are invited; all are welcome; we urge you to come and make this a happy occasion.

For the dinner bring a covered dish, or something for dessert. The ladies of the North Waterford church are making plans for the rest of the dinner.

The ministry of Dr. Wilbur I.
Bull has also been marked by 15 years here of devoted service. At a time that has been characterized in the ministry of the Rural Church by short pastorates when men ever seek more lucrative posts, in a world where cooperation is at a premium, 15 years of continuous cooperation among the churches and 15 years of continuous ministry by Dr. Bull are well worth a celebration.

On this Sunday there will be no
Sunday School in Waterford or North Waterford; Lovell and Albany have not yet reported; but the Stoneham Sunday School will meet.

In the evening the Pilgrim Fellowship of the Parish will go to Norway for a Youth Rally.

Back to Friday the 8th, there will be a Pilgrim Fellowship party in Albany for the young people of the Parish.

On Thursday the 14th of November the Fall meeting of the Parish Council will meet in Lovell. All are invited.

ceded by the Annual Rummage Sale in the Lovell Vestry. This starts at 1 p. m. A Circle supper will be served at 6 p. m.

TWENTY-TWO YEARS AGO, on Flanders' shell-corn fields, a bugle's silver tone brought golden silence to still the cacophony of War . . . a silence, however, epitomized by the grim quiet of battle grounds with endless crosses, row on row.

Today our nation labors with feverish haste that we may build a man-made barrier against the thunderous wrath of war, bringing a continent in the wake of human hatred.
The peace of America is being carried to light forever the peace for this hemisphere.

For twenty-two years we have shed no blood in war . . .
yet American motherhood trembles as children kneel in evening prayer for fear that this precious peace may not be maintained . . . that the overseas lightning may yet flash across the ocean with its blighting destruction.

Well today may we add to our pleas before the Almighty's throne our prayer for a continuation of the golden silence that came on this day in 1918 . . . and from the merest child to the tottering patriarch, add these words to our supplication . . .

"And grant us Peace . . . Amen!"

Economic Highlights

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems Inseparable from Local Welfare

To most Americans, the government at Vichy in so-called "free France" is a pathetic spectacle. You can draw a parallel with it here, working on the supposition that we have been decisively defeated in a ruinous war, have seen our capital, practically all of our industrial areas, and close to half of our territory occupied by a ruthless enemy, and are faced on all sides by enemy troops against whom we have no military defence. That is the position France is in today. And, under those circumstances, Marshal Petain's announcement that France would co-operate with the Axis powers to "restore peace in Europe" should not have come as any great surprise.

Whether or not this makes France a definite ally of the totalitarian states is not yet clear. But it does make clear the unpleasant fact that France will do—officially at least—whatever Hitler and Mussolini want. Few observers think that Hitler's promise not to use the French Navy against England is worth a boat—most of them think that before long what is left of that Navy may be at sea fighting for the Axis. Every French resource will be placed at Hitler's disposal when he wants it. It is no doubt true that the Average French citizen hates Germany and prays for British victory, but he is helpless. Every precaution has been taken to make organized resistance impossible.

The action of France is simply one more of those many actions which have been dividing the entire world into two distinct and opposed groups. On one side are Germany, Italy, Japan and those other peoples the Axis is able to control. On the other is Britain and the United States. Latin America remains the question mark, and during the next few years both sides are going to use every weapon at their command—flattery, bribery, and threats to win her support. This war is no ordinary war. It is a world revolution. And "woe to the vanquished" will be the motto of the ultimate victor.

There is little talk now of the war ending soon. Rumors are again making the rounds concerning peace proposals, and France was supposed to have been drawn into the Axis for that purpose. But it is extremely difficult to see now how any agreement could be made that would be satisfactory to both Hitler and England, to say nothing of this country, which seems determined to have a say when it comes to redrawing the world around a conference table. The chance for a negotiated peace, in other words, might be called an exceedingly improbable possibility.

The only other alternative is peace through complete military victory, which is what both Hitler and Churchill have often said is their sole aim. Churchill has also said that England will have air superiority within another year and will take the offensive then. But the events of the past year have certainly indicated that air warfare is far from decisive. In brief, no good guess as any now is that this war may go on indefinitely.

The theory used to be that neither side could command sufficient resources to keep the war going for four or eight or ten years. Time seems to have dissipated that theory. Germany's conquests have given her a wealth of raw materials. She lacks very little that is necessary to war, and what she does lack she has a good chance of getting as, for example, tin from the East Indies, to be obtained for her by her ally Japan. England, so long as she controls the seas, may have to go on short rations, but she is able to bring the necessities to her ports. Even if we accept German claims of sinkings of British owned or controlled shipping, it is obvious that hardly a dent has been made in the Empire's merchant marine.

The question of plague and famine remain. But Germany and Italy can no doubt last a long time by gutting the food supplies of the conquered peoples. All reports indicate that the Reich is doing just that now. Plague is a more difficult factor to discuss. Rumors of it come from England, due to conditions in air-raid shelters, food rationing, and the deleterious physical effect of continued bombings, etc. But so far plague has not appeared, and it may be that modern medicine may be able to prevent it on a great scale.

Summing up, it looks like a very long war—a war of attrition. It may be that the final decisive factor will be a let-down in morale on one side or the other—a widespread feeling of "what's the use of going on?" At any rate, the best experts think that this country might as well get used to half a world continually at war, whether we become belligerents or not. Even if we do keep out of war, we will become an increasingly important factor in its progress, in our role of armorer to Britain. No one can yet see the end of the Far Eastern situation—Japan has backed down a bit, but her army and navy clasp are still restive and they rattle their swords on every possible occasion. Forces such as the world has rarely known are unleashed now, and to forecast the future has become the most hazardous of undertakings.

Excitement in Washington Calms As Election Ends Party Hostility

Successful Candidate Will Be 'Everyone's President'; Future Farmers Hold Annual Convention;
Neutrality Is Hard to Grasp.

By BAUKHAGE

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)
It's sort of quiet along Main street again.

I mean along the street that runs from the marble steps of the Capitol, up past the front porch of the White House and on out by the stores where you trade and the house where you live or maybe where your lane turns off. It's all the same street with different names in different places.

It's quieter because the howdy-do over election is through with, the people have cast their votes and chosen their President and have taken up their daily tasks again.

Before election day finally arrived, cool-headed writers and public men were warning that quadrennial campaign animosities should be forgotten as soon as the vote was counted. That the lame ducks should muffle their squawks and limp off the scene as quickly as possible, and that sore heads should be nursed with patience and without post mortems.

As Alf Landon said in October, "Whoever is elected will be my President for the next four years," and I believe what he said ought to go for all of us.

Federal Employee Resents 'Loafer' Charge

The other day I was sitting in the office of a man who has served the government for 30 years. He has had at least three offers from private business with a lot more salary than he's getting. But he wouldn't take any of them. He has an important job and he likes it.

He has no politics. He was appointed in Woodrow Wilson's day. He has never voted because he's a citizen of the District of Columbia and like the rest of us residents here is classed with idiots and children, and has no vote. He heard a lot about the New Freedom before we got into the war in 1917; he watched with a slight smile as the country went "back to normalcy"; he traveled peacefully, if a little skeptically, along Calvin Coolidge's "permanent plateau of prosperity"; saw one or both chickens escape their pots in '29, and lived through the New Deal without being plowed under or made over. And after election day, 1940, he went back to his office exactly as he had done every other time, to do the work for which he gets his wage.

He is as trustworthy a hired man as ever wore a pair of Uncle Sam's overalls. Every President is his President, too. But he put it a little differently to me:

"The only kind of a political argument that makes me sore is one where some partisan gets up and hollers about 'those loafers' (Republicans or Democrats, according to kicker's politics) 'down in Washington.' They forget that the vast majority of us carry on through one administration after another, doing the work we have to do. The loafers come and go, it's true. I don't mind kicking about them myself. What I object to is this loose idea that the government is just one political party or the other. Most of us here belong to no party. For the rest of the people, one day in four years is enough to give vent to their partisan passions. The rest of the time, we ought to be just plain Americans and nothing else."

'Future Farmers' Are Bulwark of Democracy

While Uncle Sam is preparing to welcome the first draft of the citizen army which is to bulwark our democracy, another gathering of youngsters who are fighting every day for the democratic idea without perhaps realizing how important their work is, are having a big celebration.

I mean the Future Farmers of America who are holding their annual convention in St. Louis. I have known about these boys for a long time. I have been on radio programs with them and have met a lot of them who come down here to Washington to talk with their executive secretary, W. A. Ross. But I never realized until this week what a powerful influence for the preservation of the American system these fellows are.

I have two reasons for saying they are a bulwark of democracy.

First, their ideal is just the opposite of "let George do it," the way of people in a dictatorship. The Future Farmers learn "do it yourself."

That's one reason. The other is that they all seem to be imbued with the desire to own and develop the land. No room for fascism or communism in that outlook.

I met the young president, Ivan Kindschi, from an 80-acre farm in Prairie du Sac, Neb., up in the dairy country. He was in Washington on his way to the convention.

I asked Ivan: "What are you preparing to do?" "I'm going to own a farm," he said.

And that, I figured out, after a lot more questions is why most of the boys join the Future Farmers. It's simple enough—they are future farmers.

"How did you get interested in the organization?" I asked him. "Because they do interesting things."

That's simple and sensible enough too, and those interesting things include learning to be better farmers and following a great principle of democracy that gets kind of rusty in the city and in the country too—helping to make the community better.

These boys build investments in farm land, live stock and farm machinery through money they earn on their projects.

Nothing anchors a man to democracy like property he's created for. And they learn not only how to judge cattle, soil conservation, but all the other practical things a farm boy has to learn such as how to handle a hog from farm to market so when the packer weighs he won't have to cut a chunk out of a ham where somebody encouraged the poor porker aboard a truck with a boot.

Trained in their chosen profession, trained in leadership in their community, co-operative effort, thrift; and with this first phrase of their creed in their minds, "I believe in the future of farming," these young Americans are a defense of America "terrible as an army with banners."

Hughes May Retire Before Next Election

The new President is probably going to have an important task to perform which hasn't been officially announced: The appointment of a new chief justice of the United States.

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes will undoubtedly resign before another four years are over. He's in good health and spirits, and if you were to meet that familiar figure on one of his daily walks, you'd hardly believe that he will soon pass his eighty-third year. And even if you had never seen him or his picture, you'd be very likely to say:

"That man looks like what a chief justice ought to be."

Mr. Hughes ought to be, and is.

Strict Neutrality Hard to Grasp

Neutrality is a hard state of mind to grasp. I mean neutrality of mind on everyday subjects as well as toward nations in a war.

Old Dr. "A. B. C." Fletcher, well known to an earlier generation as the great advocate of chewing your food, learned about neutrality while serving as a member of Hoover's commission that fed Belgium in World War I. In that job you had to be neutral or destroy your own usefulness.

Once he told me that you had to learn to be neutral—that it is an art. You just have to roll up your emotions and put them in a corner and look at everything objectively. Finally you get so that if a chicken runs across the road, it's still just a chicken whether you own it or whether you're the man who mixes it up with his fenders.

I've learned a little about neutrality myself in trying to be non-partisan on the radio in election years. It really isn't so hard to practice when you get used to it, but the difficulty lies in persuading other people that you are really non-partisan.

CONTORTIONIST

He—He's one of those people who pat you on the back before your eye and hits you in the eye behind your back.

Today's popularity of Doan's Pills, after many years of world-wide use, is evidence that it is a truly great remedy. And it is the only one that has been proven to be the most effective of all the pills for the treatment of kidney and bladder ailments.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

A Non-Partisan Editorial Review of the Events of Each Week, Illustrated

EDITOR'S NOTE—When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of the news analyst, and not necessarily of this newspaper.

GREECE:
Invasion

War came at last to Greece. Trouble had been looming for this country ever since the government rejected Italian demands for territory and for a free and unhampered passage of Fascist troops over Greek soil.

Italian motorized units first thrust themselves over the Greek-Albanian frontier in the mountainous borderland that stretches between the two countries. Then came two air-raid alarms for Athens, the Greek capital, and the war was on. Two of the city's major airports were bombed by the Italian planes in the first raids.

The Greek government officially announced that Great Britain was sending her "unlimited support" in her resistance to the Italian invasion. From London came word that England's pledge to back up Greece would be immediately fulfilled and a special session of the British war cabinet was quickly called to consider the outbreak of this new war.

Italian sources claimed that the Greeks had been guilty of "provocations" and before the outbreak of actual hostilities, Rome had issued an ultimatum demanding the right for Italian forces to occupy Greece. England's aid for her new "ally" would logically come in the form of air and naval forces operating from Egyptian bases, informed sources in London said. British men-of-war were immediately steaming out of these bases toward Greek ports, early war bulletins indicated.

What effect this new theater of military operations would have on the decision of the Turkish and Russian governments to cast their lot with either side thus became an important diplomatic question. Turkey's attitude would more than likely depend on how much aid Great Britain would give Greece and upon news of Russia's behavior in the present crisis.

CAPSULES:
Lottery Party

Selective service officials in Washington put all the numbers from one to several thousand in opaque blue capsules, trotted out a blindfold that had been a museum piece since the World War, and the notables of the nation drew them out of a Schlotz, just as was done in 1917.

Every effort was made to make the capsule party as near like its ancestor as possible.

NAMES
... in the news

KING CAROL—frontier in totalitarian Spain, feared that Lopezu will be extradited, appeals to the United States to save him and his party. He received a 20 minute visit from his aunt and a bitter "dressing down."

JAMES BUTLER—chain store millionaire and New York racetrack owner, was killed falling off a horse.

ADMIRAL WOODWARD of the navy keyed Navy day by the statement that the "battleship is still supreme" on the oceans of the world, and a "bulwark of defense" for this nation.

MAHATMA GANDHI—Hindu leader, suspended publication of his paper rather than submit to British censorship.

CHAIRMAN KNUDSEN of the National Council of Defense told industry: "You'll have a hard time getting tools—the machine tool industry is sold out for two years on national defense contracts."

DETROIT, MICH.—To break the "bottleneck" which is holding down production of fighting planes, William S. Knudsen, head of the national defense advisory commission, met here with heads of the auto industry to lay plans for the mass production of planes. Picture shows, left to right: C. E. Wilson, president of General Motors; Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company; Knudsen; K. T. Keller, president of Chrysler Corporation; and Paul Hoffman, president of Studebaker Corporation.

It was the identical blindfold; supposedly the identical fishbowl (though there was some uncertainty about this) they were the same capsules, the same numbers.

And just to make everything perfect, there also was Lieut. Charles R. Morris of Elizabeth, N. J., who dropped down to the nation's capital to complete the picture.

He is the man who blindfolded Secretary of War Baker at the time No. 258 was drawn in 1917.

Lieutenant Morris even stirred the capsules with the same paddle that they were stirred with before.

Selective service headquarters announced the classification of the entire group would proceed, but that the first roll call would probably be small—about 20 per cent of the quota of trainees being summoned in the "first draft."

National Guard generals, after they'd talked things over in Washington, agreed it was improbable that trainees would "get off" with just one year in the army. Said one:

"The emergency probably will not be over in a year—and if it isn't, the army is going to find that they can't make real, efficient shock troops in 12 months. I don't expect either guard or draftees to be back home after a year."

PRESSURE:
France Gives In

The yielding of the Vichy government to Hitler's demands brought the war to a new crisis, as Britain prepared for a possible naval onslaught on the French fleet at Toulon and other bases. It was believed the new fight might make the 10-minute battle at Oran seem like a picnic.

Pierre Laval's star was in its ascendancy, Paul Baudouin leaving the French cabinet, a move in which British statesmen could find little comfort as Laval is even more anti-British than was his predecessor.

Russia continued to teeter on the brink of trouble in the Balkans. Soviet leaders were invited to participate with the Axis powers in an essential conference over the final disposition of the Lower Danube in consonance with Europe's New Order. Yet Britain continued diplomatic pressure on the Soviet in the hope of keeping Russia a potential aid to Turkey and Greece in the Balkans.

New critical point of the war shifted to Syria as the people of the British Isles continued to hold firm, and to smile cheerily as pieces of London and other cities fell about their ears.

Nazi air pressure relaxed for a couple of days. Londoners got a little bolder about their shopping, and suddenly daylight raiders jammed sticks of bombs into crowded streets. There was great slaughter. Italy proudly announced her planes were taking part in the London bombings.

Radio and press reports from Berlin admitted heavier raiding by British bombers. Chief development in the air was the use of the new type Nazi fighter-bombers, and the report that the R.A.F. was going to bring out a new model plane to combat them. Air losses by both sides were far below those reported in previous attacks, however, and ground casualties also were diminished, although property damage was heavy. British photos showed much destruction in their own country, and meager German reports admitted that Hamburg was hard hit.

STRETCH DRIVE:
Political Race

Few elections within memory have seen such a "stretch drive" as the two candidates put on whiffle the 1940 race neared its end, with the "big surprise" (to voters of one side or the other) waiting at the "wire" November 5.

The Republican big guns unlimbered, with Dewey, Al Smith and John L. Lewis furnishing the major explosions. Al and his brown derby stepped into the picture against the man who nominated him.

Dewey went "all out" for the man who nominated him at Philadelphia; and John L. Lewis deserted Roosevelt and jumped clean overboard from the ship of New Deal state, to sink or swim with Wallace.

New features on the political scene were the vanishing of the Literary Digest poll, and the appearance of Dr. Gallup and a half-dozen small-fry copyists, now seeing the thing from one side or another.

Whispercrackers said the "election Gallop" along to the finish.

The closing days of the campaign were marked by more booing, yowling and cheering in movie theaters during newscast political "shots" than the oldest resident could remember.

HEALTH:
Blow at Thrombosis

New hope for the elderly that they may not be "carried off" by one of the several forms of "thrombosis" (blood clotting) that are a leading cause of human death was seen in Chicago when Dr. Gordon Murray of Toronto told members of the American College of Surgeons about heparin. This active substance of the liver has been isolated in pure crystalline form, and is giving medicine a new arm in warfare against thrombosis.

Dr. Murray and his associates, using heparin, have:

1. Grafted bits of vein in damaged arteries.
2. Removed blood clots surgically.
3. Aided cases of thrombosis in the lungs.

The first two have been hardly possible previously because of formation of new blood clots at the site of operation. The third is still a mystery to doctors. Heparin, they say, does not dissolve blood clots, just keeps them from forming.

Murray and his associates believe heparin may be the answer to prevention of thrombosis in old age.

POLICY:

U. S. Stands Firm

Successive steps of the "peace offensive" against Britain were (first) the boiling of the Balkan pot; (second) the effort to get Spain to bottle up the west end of the Mediterranean or to lend herself to it; (third) the inducing of France to complete her surrender and to hint that the United States would be asked to act as intermediary.

Counter-moves in this foreign policy war were these: (first) Churchill's talk in French to the French people urging them to stand firm, and assuring them that Britain would win the war; (second) the United States' warning to France that if she lined up with the Axis she need look for no help in case of famine; and (third) the flat statement of Secretary Hull that the United States will take part in no such peace move.

Thus it was made plain to Europe and Americans alike that there is to be no softening of the United States' foreign policy. Pan-America added its bit to the picture by announcing itself ready and equipped to take over French colonies in this hemisphere.

These include French Guiana, Guadalupe and Martinique, the latter interesting because French naval vessels are sequestered there; also an undetermined number of American planes shipped there earlier in the war and intended for French use on the continent. They're still in their crates.

Britain had swiftly, while this foreign policy "test-tube" work was going on, declared herself as "in the war to stay" and "ready to listen to no peace talk" from any quarter "on German terms."

In the meantime, contracts have been let, and work has started on the new American naval and air base at British Bermuda, first of a series.

SALESMAN:

Hitler Busy

The armored train that carries the Nazi Fuehrer on his traveling salesman job of talking France and Spain and Italy into his way of thinking has been making more mileage.

It has rolled into France, also "somewhere in the Pyrenees" and its chief passenger has had his talks with Franco and Laval.

The result of the French trip is known, but not its details, which were withheld from publication, and "will not be given to the press," according to both British and Nazi sources.

Few photos of the meetings were made, but they show the same picture as that at Brennero—long lines of helmeted soldiers presenting arms on both sides of the steel-armored train, batteries of anti-aircraft artillery training guns and binoculars slotted; blinds of the train windows pulled down; Hitler and his conferees striding up and down.

MISCELLANY:

Prince Roger Starhemberg used to own 30 castles in Austria. He overthrew the little Austrian democracy in early 1934. First, in 1923, he served Hitler. Later he fought him.

Now, Prince Roger is serving England. He is a lieutenant of De Gaulle. He was being, amid a storm, investigated by parliament. Prince Roger is a close friend of Fritz Mandl, former Austrian munitions king, who was one of Hedy Lamarr's husbands.

Funny things happen in Reno. John E. Lichtenberg tried to fix up a mistake in his registration for the draft. Now, he finds he has two numbers—a pair of them. They misspelled the Lichtenberg name, so on the second try, he got a second number. He has a number with each card. They said he had two shooting-irons in the fire.

Meanwhile, Clarence A. Dykstra, new director of the selective military service, assured the country there would be "no possible favoritism" in calling up 800,000 men for military training. Dykstra had been city manager of the reformed Cincinnati, and then president of the University of Wisconsin, following the late Glenn Frank.

An attendance record was established in the national parks during the 1940 travel year. Visitors numbered 16,741,855, a million more than last year.

'Democracy'

Harvey D. Gibson, board chairman of the New York World's fair, closed the place up. The finale of this "democracy" coincided with the finale of a long list of unfortunate "democracies," and their democratizations. Admiral Giuseppe Cantu, Italian commissioner general, died suddenly of a heart attack, and Grover Whalen, president of the fair, commiserated. Cantu's son, Giovanni, is commanding an Italian submarine in the Mediterranean.

ART:

$50,000,000 Gift

A collection of more than 100 masterpieces by the world's leading artists has been presented by the millionaire sportsman, Joseph E. Widener of Philadelphia, to the National Art gallery at Washington. The National gallery was the gift to the nation of the late Andrew W. Mellon. The Widener collection, valued as high as $50,000,000, is the most important gift of paintings to date.

RESOLUTIONS

Whereas: the Supreme Ruler over all has again seen fit to remove from our midst one who has had always been a faithful and beloved member and whose presence at our meetings will be sadly missed.

Resolved: we, the members of Mountain View Grange, extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband in his sad affliction by the great loss of his wife.

Resolved: that we, as members, deeply mourn the loss of our worthy sister, Nora Heath Goodnow, but the memory of her character is with us, and she has left the assurance that she joined the great throng above where pain and sorrow never enter.

Resolved: that our charter be draped for thirty days, that a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the records of our Grange, one sent to the afflicted family, and one one printed in the Oxford County Citizen.
